KQED AND KTEH
HONORED WITH LOCAL AWARDS AND NOMINATIONS

- KQED Public Radio receives Edward R. Murrow Regional award for News Series --
- KQED Public Television and KTEH Public Television earn sixteen Northern California EMMY nominations --

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, April 15, 2008 – Northern California Public Broadcasting is pleased to announce awards and nominations recognizing the quality programming on KQED Public Radio, KQED Public Television, and KTEH Public Television. KQED Public Radio has received the prestigious Edward R. Murrow Regional Award for a News Series, and KQED Public Television and KTEH Public Television have earned 16 Northern California EMMY® nominations.

KQED Public Radio received the 2008 Edward R. Murrow Regional Award for a News Series, for coverage of “Climate Change and California’s Water” and will go on to compete for the national award in this category. The documentary series, produced for the daily news program The California Report, explores the implications of global warming on California’s levees, plants and animals, and the lives of its citizens. This award-winning, seven-part series “Climate Change and California’s Water” is available at www.californiareport.org.

KQED and KTEH Public Television garnered Northern California EMMY® nominations for projects ranging from QUEST, a local multimedia series concentrating on science, nature, and the environment, to Spark, a series about Bay Area artists and arts organizations. KQED editor Laurie Schmidt received five nominations, the most nominations for an individual from a public television station.
