SEISMIC SAFETY IN CALIFORNIA PUBLIC SCHOOLS IS SUBJECT OF RADIO SERIES AND TELEVISION DOCUMENTARY

San Francisco, April 8, 2011—KQED, the public media station serving Northern California, and the Center for Investigative Reporting's California Watch announce a radio series and television special that examines seismic safety concerns in California's public schools. More than a year in the making, the series will air on KQED 88.5FM and on stations statewide via KQED's The California Report beginning Friday, April 8 (full schedule below). An original television special, On Shaky Ground, will air on KQED 9 on Friday, April 15th at 7:30pm. The program is being made available to all other public television stations in California.

After the recent events in Haiti, Chile, and Japan, seismic safety has become an ever larger concern. While many cities and towns have been making preparations for an emergency, their attention has not been on some of the buildings for which they hold ultimate responsibility. Experts, educators, and parents have been left wondering whether schools—and the children who attend them—are as safe as they should be.

In addition to the radio reports and television special, an interactive component, located at KQEDnews.org, will provide the collected radio reports (available in audio and text format), the television program, a glossary of terms, a map of historical quakes in California, searchable databases and interactive maps showing potentially problematic schools and districts, information and resources, and other original content.

Statewide distribution will allow for the largest possible audience. KQED Public Radio's The California Report is distributed to more than 70 stations across the state. In addition, On Shaky Ground will be distributed to various public television stations in California, including KCET/Los Angeles, KVIE/Sacramento, and KPBS/San Diego. Other stations are expected to confirm shortly.

"The recent international earthquake catastrophes have again reminded us of California's vulnerability and the importance of anticipating and preventing a major catastrophe here. And it is hard to imagine anything more urgent than protecting the children in our schools," said John L. Boland, president and chief executive officer of KQED. "We are very pleased to partner with the Center for Investigative Reporting and California Watch to bring this critical information to public radio, television, and online audiences statewide.”

“KQED is a valuable partner for us in this and all of California Watch’s projects,” said Robert J. Rosenthal, Executive Director of the Center for Investigative Reporting, California Watch’s parent organization. “Our collaboration with KQED has benefited not only us but the public interest. It fits in perfectly with our goal of multi-platform journalism reaching varied and new audiences.”

About California Watch and the Center for Investigative Reporting

About California Watch and the Center for Investigative Reporting

California Watch, the largest investigative team operating in the state, was launched in 2009 by the nonprofit, nonpartisan Center for Investigative Reporting. Priority areas of coverage include education, health and welfare, public safety, the environment and the influence of money on the political and regulatory process. California Watch receives funding from The James Irvine Foundation, The William and Flora Hewlett Foundation, The John S. and James L. Knight Foundation, and the California Endowment. California Watch received a National Headliner Award in 2011. In 2010, California Watch received a general excellence award from the Online News Association, and its staff also was named “Journalists of the Year” by the Northern California chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists.

The Center for Investigative Reporting is the nation's oldest nonprofit investigative news organization. CIR reports have reached the public through television, print, radio and the web, appearing in outlets such as 60 Minutes, PBS Frontline, NPR, The Los Angeles Times, Washington Post, Politico and U.S. News & World Report. CIR stories have received numerous journalism awards including the Alfred I. du Pont-Columbia University Silver Baton, George Polk Award, Emmy Award, Investigative Reporters and Editors Award, and a National Magazine Award for Reporting Excellence. More importantly, its reports have sparked congressional hearings and legislation, United Nations resolutions, public interest lawsuits and change in corporate policies. CIR founded California Watch to help create a new model for regional investigative and other high-impact reporting.
